After a fun day at school, I was walking home with my stepdad and my younger brother. The air was chilly and turned our cheeks a rosy shade of pink. I pulled the zip on my coat up closer to my chin while Lucas pulled his gloves out of his pocket. We walked back through the park (down the road from our home) and Lucas loved running through the crunching leaves that covered the ground. He squealed with delight as the leaves danced in the air, brought back to life by the feet of a six-year-old boy. The trees above us were laden with conkers ready to fall. As we left the park and passed the bus stop, our house came into view. We stepped inside and took off our muddied shoes, undoing the laces quickly. Lucas and I went upstairs to change out of our school uniforms and into cosy pyjamas. Neil made us each an enormous cup of hot chocolate, topped with squirty cream and mini marshmallows; we even had sprinkles on top. The feeling of Autumn filled me with joy and I couldn't wait to enjoy a season of happiness and comfort with my family, alongside all of the delicious treats we would get to devour.
